

SHOW CASE

World View

Turning his lens on daily life in the developing world, award-winning photographer Fredric Roberts spent five years traveling through Asia and photographing its people. His journey took him to India, Bhutan, Cambodia, Thailand, Myanmar, China and all points in between. "When I look at the people I photograph, I see that they have a larger vision of life, a vision that transcends monetary wealth," Roberts says. The work he did in Mumbai and throughout the state of Gujarat, India, including this image of a Sikh couple, is on display at the Museum of Photographic Arts in San Diego, California. The exhibit, Humanitas: Images of India, is up through Sept. 7.

Canon EOS-1V, Canon 24-70mm f/2.8L, Kodak VS film